BAINBRIDGE SUFFERS $5,000 LOSS BY FIRE

EARLY SUNDAY MORNING BLAZE DESTOYS McKEE BLOCK, BITTER BUILDING, DR. J. F. CULLY'S OFFICE AND HARRY SINGLETON'S GROCERY STORE.

FIRE STARTED IN DOCTOR'S OFFICE

Loss is Confined Mostly to the Buildings as Most all of the Contents of the Buildings With the Exception of Dr. Cully's Office Were

control, and, although the volunteer fire fighters did the best they could the flames could not be checked and the fire burned itself out. The fire burned until about five o'clock in the morning.

The buildings burned were on the south side of the main street of the town, and directly across the street from the block of buildings burned last spring. A coincidence is the fact that both fires occurred on Sunday morning.

Mrs. Rea, an old lady living across the street from Dr. Cully's office, was the first to discover the fire. At the time she first saw it the flames had little headway but before she could summon aid the Dr. Cully office was burning fiercely.

The volunteer fire fighters immediately began work to attempt to save the adjoining buildings, it being too late to attempt to save anything in Dr. Cully's office.

Harry Singleton's store, the next building east of Dr. Cully's office had then caught fire. By valiant work most of the stock was removed from the building and was saved. The building, however, was totally destroyed. On the west side of Dr. Cully's office was the McKee building, the Ritter building and the Harry Singleton Grocery store building. The loss is estimated at between $4,500 and $5,500.

The cause of the fire is not definitely known but it is believed that it started from the stove in Dr. Cully's office. The loss to Dr. Cully is complete as nothing at all was saved. Mr. Singleton saved most of his fixtures and stock and his loss is confined to his building.

The McKee building owned by Lave McKee, of Indianapolis, was totally destroyed. The first floor rooms of the building were not occupied but the second story was occupied by the Masons. The property of the latter was removed from the building before they were damaged to any extent. The Ritter building, owned by George Ritter, of Thornstown, was not occupied by any business concern and the loss is confined to the building.

The fire which was discovered at about 3:30 o'clock was then beyond ing kept the fire from spreading further west. The Masons who occupied the second floor of the McKee building, saved most of their property by tearing up their carpets and rolling their property in the carpet. The bundle was then thrown out of the window.

The fact that the wind which was at first blowing directly from the west, shifted and blew to the south, aided the fire fighters in saving the Singleton home.

There is much difference of opinion regarding the origin of the fire. Some believe that an over heated stove started the fire but Dr. Cully insists that there was no fire in his stove at near twelve o'clock Saturday night when he left his office. Some believe that the fire started from a gasoline lighting plant in the office, while others believe that the fire was incendiary origin.

On account of the high rates asked by the insurance company there was no insurance on any of the buildings and the loss will be total. Dr. Cully has stated that he will at once rebuild. This time he will build a concrete building one which will not burn. His loss is great, having lost all of his instruments, library and ledgers which contained all of his outstanding accounts.

An early effort to secure aid from Rosedale was unsuccessful and the fire fighters began an effort to save the buildings east of the Singleton store. In saving the Singleton home they succeeded in saving two other buildings just east of the Singleton home, which no doubt would have burned had the Singleton home caught fire.

A humorous incident in connection to the fire was an accident to E. W. Graham, editor of the Bainbridge paper. During the fire he started to get a bucket of water when he stepped into an open well. Beside getting a good ducking he was none the worse for the accident.

DR. STEPHENSON SPEAKS

Dr. Andrew Stephenson spoke last night at College Avenue Church upon Gladstone. A good audience was present and the address, which was largely the material from the written account published recently in the Christian Advocate, was much appreciated. Gladstone was made to appear as a gigantic historical character, well worthy of study and emulation.

FORGERY CHARGE AGAINST BUSTER

MAN ARRESTED ON STATEMENT OF DICK WHITE WHO PASSED
CHECKS WITH FORGED SIGNATURE OF JAS. BRIDGES

MAN DECLARES INNOCENCE

On last Friday afternoon Dick White was arrested in Fillmore on the charge of forging two checks with the name of James Bridges. The checks were cashed by The Model Clothing Company and by George Cook, grocery of the Hanna street grocery. The two checks aggregated $46. When White was arrested he accused Gant Buster of being responsible for the forgeries.

On Saturday Buster was arrested and taken to jail. White had declared that Buster gave him the checks and instructed him how to endorse them. Buster, on the other hand, declares that he had nothing to do with the checks. He says he was in Terre Haute on Wednesday and in Indianapolis on Thursday with White and helped spend the money but did not know where it came from.

White tells a very contradictory story, while Buster tells a straight one.

The preliminary hearing was set for two o'clock this afternoon, but owing to the fact that Prosecutor Hughes was detained in Brazil, the hearing was postponed.

OPENING MEETING OF THE REVIVAL

Revival Starts Last Night with a Large Audience.

Sunday evening the Christian Church was filled with appreciative people—it was the opening meeting of the revival. The sermon by J. C. Todd was an excellent one and made a deep impression. Everyone seemed to feel that a good meeting has begun. The chorus was too large for the platform and steps are being taken to day to enlarge the same.

S. J. Wilton has charge of the chorus and all seem much pleased with his leadership. The song service begins promptly at 7:30 and this opening part of the service will be very inspiring. A unique feature of the meeting this evening will be reading replies to questions which Mr. Todd gave out last evening.

He requested the people to put on paper and hand to him answers to the following: What is the matter with Greencastle? What is the matter with the Church in Greencastle? The Herald will give some of these answers tomorrow.

The subject of Mr. Todd's sermon this evening is "Christ, The New Year and I."

THE SAME TACTICS HERE

Oil Company Drills Near Bedford—
Plugs the Hole and Says Nothing

Near Russellville, not long since, an oil company sunk two wells, plugged both and left without saying a word as to what they found.

The people there are guessing and watching the options on their farms. The same story comes now from Bedford. It is as follows:

"No little excitement has been caused in the vicinity of Heltonville by the report that strangers are again in the vicinity, calling on the farmers, trying to secure options and leases on farm property in that vicinity.

The Ohio Oil Company that recently withdrew a part of the casing from their well at that place and departed, absolutely refused to give any out of any information in regard to what they were drilling through and were prepared to depart before anyone knew of their intentions. There is a story afloat at Heltonville that a man residing near the well took the trouble to uncover the opening that had been covered with boards and piled high with dirt and gravel, and found that oil had raised to within five feet of the top. The residents of Heltonville are positive that oil is there in paying quantities. The Heltonville-Bedford Company have not yet lost faith and are making preparations to again drill.—Bedford Mail.

DEPAUW GLEE CLUB SINGS AT CENTENNARY CHURCH.

Seventeen Real Live College Boys,
in Charge of Capable Director, Appear in This City.

A rare treat is offered Terre Hauteans with the coming to Centennary M. E. Church on Thursday evening of the DePauw Glee Club for a concert. The club comes to this city from an unusually successful trip which started at Indianapolis before the holidays.

Seventeen real live college boys are in the troupe under the capable direction of Rufus Bernhard von KleinSmid, who has had a wide experience in directing minstrels and amateur theatricals. Prof KleinSmid had charge of the club last year when they entertained a crowd of over three hundred at Centennary in spite of the bad weather.

Leonard Nattkemper, a local boy, who achieved a great success in the role of impersonator last year, is unable to be with the troupe this year because of ill health.

Raymond Danforth Jackson, baritone, and Paul Benedict, violinist have special features. Mr. Rook, of Centennary Church, who has charge of the arrangements for the concert expects to have five or six hundred in attendance. The number last year was decreased by the bad weather which attended the appearance of the club.—Terre Haute Tribune.

CONTRACTORS TO GET MONEY

JUDGE RAWLEY RULES IN CLAY
COUNTY THAT WORK DONE MUST BE PAID FOR.

MORE SUITS ARE FILED

Judge Rawley, in the Clay Circuit Court on Saturday morning, ruled in favor of the gravel road contractors in their mandamus proceedings brought against County Auditor Burns and County Treasurer Lanning to secure the payment of their claims for constructing gravel road in this county which had previously been allowed by the Board of Commissioners but payment on which had been refused by the auditor and treasurer on advice of the holders of bonds.

Judge Rawley in mandating the auditor to draw the warrants and the treasurer to cash the same, held that the money due the gravel road contractors were valid claims for the construction of gravel roads and as the work had already been performed the contractors were entitled to the payment of their claims.

The three suits in which action was taken by Judge Rawley that morning were brought by Lewis Gibbons, John E. Grider and Ralph Campbell and Charles Crabb. Gibbons held a claim against the county for $950, Campbell & Crabb for $1,000 and Grider for $1,500 which must now be paid. Other gravel road claims aggregating about $8,000 are still pending.—Brazil News.

PINCHOT VS. BALLINGER

CONGRESSMAN MOSS MAKES
PLAIN THE TAFT ATTACK UPON THE ROOSEVELT POLICY OF CONVERSATION.

IS NATIONALLY IMPORTANT

The real work of the regular session of congress began with the close of the holidays; but no one will predict what the session will bring forth. The situation here is well described in a cartoon published in the Chicago-Record Herald, under the caption "Congress Meets." The cartoon is a picture representing Senator Aldrich and Speaker Cannon shaking hands. Here in Washington among the members themselves the two great questions most talked about are, the position of the Insurgent Republicans, and the Ballinger-Pinchot act. It is safe prediction that these two factors right now are the largest forces in our congressional life. The love existing between the two factions best expressed in their own words. In his Kansas City speech, Speaker Cannon in referring to the insurgents said: "I know of but one way to treat them, and that is to fight them just as we fought Mr. Bryan and his followers. In reply, Senator LaFollette in his magazine, says: That Aldrich's success is due to the fact that he has the solid support of the motto, rubber stamp senators, ready to follow him through thick and thin, without asking or knowing whither. Cannon's speech has been printed as a public document and will be sent out in the mails without the payment of postage; and for this, LaFollette says: Hale and Carter (Republican Senators from the states of Maine and Montana) are proceeding upon the assumption that the Boston and Maine railroad and the Amalgamated Copper Company can carry the next election. They should remember that there is quite an extensive territory in this country overlying the boundaries of Maine and Montana. Even in Maine and Montana it may transpire that they have been engaged in that stupid transaction called "Rocking the Boat." So far, this quarrel has not reached the floor of congress this session; but the Ballinger-Pinchot difficulty has, and a resolution to investigate the matter has been adopted. As the question in dispute affects every man, born within the next century, this question is broader than any party lines and becomes a national question in the true sense of the term.

Both Ballinger and Pinchot were officers under President Roosevelt. Ballinger as commissioner of the General Land Office and Pinchot as National Forester. Ballinger resigned in March, 1908, and became an attorney for certain corporations—the Cunninghams and the Guggenheims—who were interested in securing large tracts of public lands valuable for coal, phosphate, timber and water-power. In March, 1909, Ballinger retired as counsel for these corporations and became Secretary of the Interior.

During the Roosevelt administration, Secretary Garfield of the Interior withdrew from entry vast tracts of land along western rivers which were well adapted to furnish water power for electrical purposes. He also withdrew four and a half millions of acres of phosphate lands in the west; and fifty-two hundred and eighty acres of coal lands in Alaska. It is claimed that an estimate made by government engineers showed that in these Alaska claims alone, there is more coal than has ever been mined in the state of Pennsylvania. These lands had been filed upon by the Cunningham corporation, for which Ballinger was attorney, and which was set aside by Garfield as being fraudulent entries.

STOMACH LIVER LUNGS

Each of the chief organs of the body is a link in the Chain of Life. A chain is no stronger than its weakest link, the body no stronger than its weakest organ. If there is weakness of stomach, liver or lungs, there is a weak link in the chain of life which may snap at any time. Often this so-called "weakness" is caused by lack of nutrition, the result of weakness or disease of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. Diseases and weaknesses of the stomach and its allied organs are cured by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. When the weak or diseased stomach is cured, diseases of other organs which seem remote from the stomach but which have their origin in a diseased condition of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition, are cured also.

The strong man has a strong stomach.
Take the above recommended "Discovery" and you may have a strong stomach and a strong body.

What is Hyomei?

You Have Heard About the Catarrh Cure that the Owl Drug Store and the Red Cross Pharmacy Guarantee.

Hyomei is a wonderful antiseptic, so powerful that it promptly destroys germ life, yet its action on the mucous membrane is extremely soothing and healing. It relieves catarrh in five minutes; it cures in a few weeks or money back.

It is made chiefly of eucalyptus and eucalyptol taken from the eucalyptus forest of inland Australia. The medical profession knows that eucalyptus is an absolutely certain germ destroyer and with the active principles of eucalyptus as a base Hyomei is made more efficient, pleasant and quick acting by the addition of Thymol, an antiseptic and disinfectant largely employed in the Listerian System. Quinacel and other important medicinal agents are also included in the Hyomei formula, which, without doubt, is the greatest destroyer of catarrh germs the world has ever known.

Hyomei is a powerful penetrating antiseptic that is pleasant to use. It does not contain a particle of cocaine or any habit-forming or injurious drug.

No dosing the stomach when you use Hyomei. Just breathe it in through the small inhaler that comes with each outfit. Sold by leading druggists everywhere and in Greencastle by the Owl Drug Store and Red Cross Pharmacy. $1.00 for a complete outfit.

ARRANGING FLOWERS TO BEST ADVANTAGE.

Any yellow, red or white blossoms except roses, are admirably adapted to place in brass or copper jars, and such holders have distinct advantages over ordinary vases, for the reason that they may be used for other purposes.

Nothing can be more charming, for instance, and at the same time less expensive than a shallow jar or basin, holding five jonquills and as many stems of narcissus. When a few flowers are used they should be placed in small iron rings, to be found now in almost all art departments, and certainly in all oriental shops. The rings are just large enough to hold one flower, and are joined in groups of three or five. These sets are put into any kind of shallow dish one chooses, filling it with water. The addition of small white pebbles, just on a line with the top of the rings, adds to the artistic effect, if the stems are a bit small for the holders each may be braced by putting a piece of match or a section of another stem into the hole. The object is to make each flower stand erect. A better effect is gained by having the stems irregular lengths, rather than all the same. Any stiff stalk flowers are used in this way, and later in the spring twigs of apple and other fruit blossoms make a lovely table decoration.

Very long stem jonquills are effective in a deep brass or copper jar. A large number is not required if the blossoms are first put into a tumbler or other small receptacle. This, filled with water, is placed in the metal. Mignonette is another flower that lends itself to metal holders with admirable results, especially as the stems soon defile the water and transparency then, detracts from their beauty.

Cut glass and silver are better adapted for roses than to any other flowers, the combination being more harmonious. Rose stems, with the foliage attached, are always pretty and show through glass, while the brilliancy of the cutting, or polish of the silver, sets off the flowers as diamonds do an evening gown.—Washington Star.

THE SOPHISTICATED ROMANCE.

By George Jardine Milligan.

Miss Charteris met Dekker ten minutes after the boat left Bombay, and their acquaintance ripened like rye in a soft wind and a southern sun. Having nothing to do and plenty of time to do it in, and Dekker being dark and interesting, and likely to be in considerable favor in the drawing room, Miss Charteris placed herself entirely at his disposal during the long-drawn-out days. Dekker, knowing that he could have nothing better to do, and also having plenty of time to do it in, made the most of his opportunities.

There was no danger in this—no foolish risk of alleged singed wings or cracked hearts. Both Dekker and Miss Charteris knew exactly the game the other was playing, and, each knowing it, proceeded to get the fullest satisfaction out of it.

If Dekker ever thought that Miss Charteris might be caring for him a little more than was absolutely necessary, he was always disabused of this idea when Miss Charteris looked at him from under her long lashes and smiled.

On this very satisfactory basis, Miss Charteris and Dekker managed to get as much solid enjoyment out of the voyage as any other two passengers put together and cubed. The other passengers knew this, and it did not improve their tempers or their opinion of Miss Charteris—when she was not present. Both Miss Charteris and Dekker knew this, but with their perfect understanding, and in its full security they only laughed. The other passengers heard them, and Miss Charteris' character became as the flag that has braved the battle and the breeze—a thing of shreds and patches.

This is where Cantrell entered the story. Cantrell was fair and youthful, and believed in the glory and universal goodness of woman. Reduced to working dimensions, this meant that he admired Miss Charteris, who was beautiful in a stately, handsome kind of way. Had Miss Charteris not been beautiful, Cantrell would not have given her a second thought, and would have looked for the glory and universal goodness of woman elsewhere. This, however, has nothing to do with the story.

Miss Charteris graciously said that she was entirely at his service. One day Cantrell overheard some of the women passengers discussing the bright particular virtues of Miss Charteris. They were discussing them with trimmings, and almost unnecessary detail, and the "glory and universal goodness" seemed to be missing somewhere. Cantrell went at first extremely hot, and then unpleasantly cold.

Then he retired with a nasty taste in his mouth, and went up on deck to get some clean air.

That night Cantrell waited for Miss Charteris to come on deck after dinner. Then, before Dekker had time to throw away his cigar and appropriate her, he went forward and asked her if she could spare him a few minutes of her valuable time. It was rather important, said Cantrell, who was looking very white, and tense, and earnest.

What followed is so surprising that it is a wonder Miss Charteris did not show the other passengers something of her astonishment. Cantrell led her to the end of the after deck, arranged a chair for her, and without any preliminaries, but with considerable preparation, began by telling her of the loving kindness and charity of the other passengers—the woman ones—toward her—Miss Charteris.

Knowing all this quite as well as Cantrell, Miss Charteris was wondering a little at his taking so much trouble to tell her, when, without a word of warning, Cantrell plunged into his amazing proposition.

Miss Charteris never heard exactly what Cantrell did say, partly because she was genuinely surprised out of herself and partly because he spoke very rapidly and nervously. What Cantrell said in effect was that the lady passengers said all the nasty things they had because she—Miss Charteris—was good and beautiful, and that was sufficient for him. But, unfortunately, in this wicked world it was not sufficient for other people. She—Miss Charteris—could not afford to ignore all the spite and malice that existed on board and, therefore, he—Cantrell—in his wisdom and knowledge of the aforesaid wicked world, offered his services to her as a sort of whipping block sailor, in order to confound the other passengers. Then the other passengers, beholding, would see how mistaken they had been, and would be filled with contrition.

Miss Charteris, after her first gasp of astonishment, had tightened hold of herself, and listened in silence. She may have been grievously tempted more than once during the recital to snub the unfortunate Cantrell, but, being as wise as she was beautiful, she held her peace.

She knew what the other passengers, her sisters, had been saying about her, and also knew that she could not altogether ignore the remarks of her sisters. Then she looked at Cantrell and saw that he was of a comely countenance and not entirely impossible. So that she did not rise up and blister him where he sat, but dropped her eyes and said, "You must give me time to think it over." Cantrell went away with the most remarkable emotions, causing him considerable discomfort. Miss Charteris had told him that she would give him her answer some time during the next day. All of which very nearly sent Cantrell headlong down the smoke room staircase before he perceived it.

Cantrell sat apart for a while and watched the last fire set sunset fire the horizon and fade; and his imagination rioted like the screw-churned water that showed in the wake. Then he went forward so as to get the shelter of the wind screens for his pipe. Passing along the deck he heard Miss Charteris' voice. He heard Miss Charteris say, "What could I do? The poor little lambkin was dreadfully in earnest. Besides, he really meant it." Then he heard Dekker give a short laugh and say, "How did you let him down?" To which Miss Charteris replied, "I said I would give him an answer tomorrow; but, seriously, I have been rather patently foolish haven't we? And this youthful bard—for he is good looking—might be a little useful in—diverting public attention, which, you must admit, I am becoming a little embarrassing." Again Dekker gave a short laugh, and the conversation switched off into something else.

As Cantrell walked away he noticed the remarkable clearness with which he could hear the revolution of the screw. Then he went head long down the smoke room staircase which he did not perceive this time and bumped his head so severely that he had to be carried to his cabin where he remained for the rest of the voyage, suffering from slight concussion.

Miss Charteris was very good—she sent a message each day asking how he was progressing.

AMERICAN GUNS.

Less Ornamented Than Those of Europe and Sold at Half Price.

The weapons of Continental Europe, England and America are constructed on similar lines, of identical quality of steel and wood, have the same systems of choking and boring and the character of workmanship is not essentially different.

There are minor variations of course dictated by taste and habit. Europe tends to multiplicity of locking devices, America to simplicity. But the one American rotary bolt is stronger and more lasting than the quintuple fastening of foreign arms.

American and English guns are alike noted for their perfection of balance, beauty of outline and severe simplicity of scroll engraving. Continental Europe tends to floridity of ornamentation with the most artistic pictorial effects in engraving and woodcutting.

One thing the American manufacturer can and does do, says Outing, he can give you as good a gun for $100 as Europe can for $200. Grade for grade it will be found on examination that there is very little to choose between an American gun costing $5 and an imported arm at $100. 1 money is no object then exercise your fancy in absolute confidence that a beautiful and satisfactory arm can be obtained either at home or abroad.

Rare Cents.

The universal money of the people in this country is the cent. The child does his earliest business thinking in terms of cents. The hobo holds up the passerby with the request for a few cents to relieve the pangs of hunger. It is the unit of coinage. On the other side of the continent the contempt for it is being rapidly overcome, and the mints have to take constantly increasing demand for it into their reckonings. The appearance of the new Lincoln cent is one of the most interesting additions to this coinage that has been produced. For practically the first time it substitutes the real for the ideal, or rather, the fanciful; but it is evidently regarded as something of an experiment, since the proposed 150,000 will not go far toward supplying current needs.

Perhaps no other monetary denomination has undergone so many changes of design. Since the republic was born there have been almost annual changes in the character of the cent. Most of these have been trivial, though some have been radical. The cent of 1792 bore a bust of Liberty, with flowing hair and the legend, "Liberty, Parent of Science and Industry." The next year what was known as the "chain cent" was produced, showing on the reverse side a chain of fifteen links. There were many imperfect dies in those days, but the imperfections have not infrequently made them more precious to coin collectors. A genuine 1799 cent has been among the pieces most prized by the numismatist, since they early became very scarce. This was said to be due to the enterprise of a Salem firm that secured several hundred thousand of them and sent them to the coast of Africa, where, punched with holes, they were hung as ornaments on the necks of natives.

THE WORK THAT'S NEVER DONE.

Serve boiled rice and tomato sauce with lamb and mutton.

Horse radish root will retain its strength if buried in sand.

Breakfast cereals should be sparingly eaten by fleshy people.

Wash canned peas and beans in cold water before heating them.

Baking in a dirty oven will spoil the flavor of delicate dishes.

It takes seven or eight hours to cook a ham in a fireless cooker, one and one-half hours to cook potatoes, and five hours to cook beans.

Try using a coffee pot to warm thin soups, and you will find it a great convenience. The right amount of soup will be poured into each plate and none will be spilled. Keep a coffee pot just for this purpose.

Put a little salt in the first water in which you wash greens. It will loosen the grit readily.

To remove candle grease wet a cloth with gasoline, rub lightly, and the grease will quickly disappear.

If you wish to keep your deserts right on the ice, place a newspaper over the ice and the dishes never slip off or tip over.

Chloride of lime will clean the white enamel sink. Wet the lime with cold water and let stand a few minutes before pouring into the sink. It is an excellent cleanser and disinfectant for both kitchen and bath room.

Tissue paper is preferable to muslin to place over lace and embroidery when they are ironed.

Dressing the Child's Hair.

When mamma was a little girl, she wore her hair in curls or a braid down her back until she was well along in her teens. Many of us can remember how we hated to be called in to have our hair curled—six little curls at the side and one on top.

The curls of today are, as a general thing, confined to the base of the neck with a big ribbon, instead of hanging from the head, as they did formerly.

Smaller girls have their locks "bobbed," or brought up from the sides of the crown of the head and tied with a big ribbon bow. Hair ribbons play an especially big part in the dress of the little girl, as they are generally bought with the purpose of matching the trimmings of her frocks. One mother, who dresses her little girl in perfect taste, buys her hair ribbons to match the color of her frocks, and these are of the new kind, white with colored tops.

Little Curly Locks may consider that she is in luck all through life. Now they make her look attractive; and later on the same little curls or waves will save my lady much work with curling tongs and kid rollers. A pretty way of arranging hair shows a big braid around the crown of the head. The front of the hair is softly waved and parted. Sometimes it is parted on the side. There is not so much bobbing off English style as there has been.

Later the young miss reaches the age when she aspires to do her hair up for the first time. No one was ever half so old and important and dignified as the girl who does her hair up for the first time. She is as dignified as a queen of royal blood, and takes life, especially that part of it which relates to herself, most seriously.

The becoming way for this important and charming young creature to wear her hair is in a psyche, now on the nape of the neck, with several small curls hanging carelessly at the sides. The front part of the hair is waved enough to give it a slight pompadour, gone now, but can we ever forget it?

The girl who has not curly hair may plait her chevelure in two plaits, and adjust it with big bows. The bows are large, but not nearly so voluminous as last year.

Saving Bulbous Plants.

To save the bulbs of cannas lilies, primroses and other bulbous plants that cannot be kept out of doors all winter, it is necessary to lift the roots before frost kills them. Frost may blight the leaves, but it takes a very hard frost, almost a winter freeze, to injure bulbs unless they are partially exposed. When you take the bulbs up, shake off as much dirt as possible, cut off the stalks and put the bulbs on paper while the dirt dries and crumbles off. It is a good idea to place the bulbs in a barrel, the bottom of which is covered with charcoal. This insures a dry atmosphere to prevent decay. Clusters should not be broken but when needed next spring they may be cut apart. They must be kept in a dark, cool place, away from artificial heat, yet protected against zero weather. If bulbs look extremely dry and withered in the winter, they should be watered, though this is seldom necessary unless there is a furnace in the cellar. Dry, furnace-heat kills the bulbs. In some sections of the country cannas will live in the garden all winter, and in other places the very first frost will kill them. Seeds can be kept and even planted in a box in the winter. While it takes a very long time for the germ to shoot through its hard coating it will, in time, appear.

PINCHOTT VS. BALLINGER

Roosevelt administration under the theory that the president is a trustee for the people, and that he had the right to refuse to give away this vast wealth belonging to all the people for the exclusive benefit of the favored few. This is really what became known as the Roosevelt Policy of conservation. The beginning of the present trouble was when Pinchot asked Secretary Ballinger to withdraw certain small tracts in Oregon and Washington. Ballinger refused this request; and when Ballinger had restored to public entry, several million acres of land of which had been withdrawn by the Roosevelt administration. Ballinger's theory is that as there is no law expressly giving this discretionary power to the president to withhold public lands from entry, that their action is doing so was necessarily illegal. In this position, Mr. Ballinger has been sustained by President Taft. So the difference between Ballinger and Pinchot becomes a difference between the theories of Roosevelt and Taft on the conservation question. This difference may be stated as follows: Roosevelt withdrew the lands because he was not forbidden by law; Taft restored the same lands because Roosevelt was not authorized by law. The effect of the former policy was to retain the title to these valuable lands in the United States and thereby prevent monopolistic control of corporations over the coal, timber, phosphate, and water-rights yet belonging to the people of our nation; and the effect of the Taft Policy will be to give private ownership and control, unless congress enacts new legislation which will prevent it.

President Taft is as earnest, probably, in his desire to protect the public domain from the land thieves of the west as was Mr. Roosevelt, but he has too much respect for the technicality of the law. He has not had the experience in public life that Roosevelt has had and does not realize the difficulties in securing from congress the necessary legislation to protect public interests. The fact that Ballinger was the attorney of record for the men who are fighting Pinchot in order to secure the vast mineral wealth of Alaska—computed to be one hundred and sixty-three million long tons of coal—does not seem to impress the President as constituting a scandal; nor the fact that the phosphate lands of the south are now controlled by a monopoly which is raising the price of fertilizer to the farmer every year, does not seem to be any reason for positive action along the lines of Roosevelt. I have had some experience in buying phosphate fertilizer at wholesale prices; and the price has risen twenty-five per cent. in the past five years.

Ex-Secretary Garfield in a public speech on this question said: "No more intolerable monopoly can be imagined than that which would control the water supply of any great section of the country." And yet if Ballinger's course is upheld and congress does not pass a new law to prevent it, the waters of the west will pass into such a condition. Practically all our national wealth has been monopolized except that which is contained in these great tracts of land which have been withdrawn from public entry—and over which this great fight is being made. Mr. Roosevelt's notion was to keep the timber on the mountain sides in the far west where irrigation is a necessity. Then by creating artificial lakes to store the surplus water for use in irrigation, and also prevent spring floods and summer droughts; develop water-power at these artificial dams, dig canals to conduct the water to the lower levels for irrigation, and thus make the water support the civilization in every possible manner; but for all this useful service, to charge the consumer a fair cost price and thus return to the public treasury the cost of the improvement and give to the whole country the advantage of good homes and productive farms. In coal and phosphate properties, to lease the right to mine under conditions which would prevent monopolistic control, but to keep ownership in the name and in the right of all the people of the United States. This is the most important question of the hour; it is along the lines laid down by Mr. Roosevelt, that our water-ways should be improved. This is what was meant by the Roosevelt policies—and which are now on trial for their life. If Ballinger policies succeed the vestage of our once vast public wealth will be turned over to the men who have looted the American people in the past of greater wealth than will pay our national debt; and children yet unborn will suffer for the comforts of life, because a certain noted African began to hunt in Africa instead of the land thieves in America.

The new "Cut to the Quick" economy policy was well illustrated in the Griggs funeral. A delegation of twenty-eight members, in charge of the Sargent-at-Arms, was sent to Georgia to pay the respect of the House. As there are but 391 members, it will be seen that one member out of fourteen took the trip, with all expenses paid out of the public treasury.
